PUBLIC TELEVISION RECEIVES CONTRIBUTION --- Programming Supervisor Ruth Uhl of KLVX, Channel 10, receives checks from Robert Robinson, Tournament Chairman (left) and Dorothy Mills, President, Valley View Golf Club. Their donation was a result of a recent golf tournament and the club's support of public television in Las Vegas.

A PITTSBURG EXPERIMENT THAT BRIDGES RACIAL GAP has been gathering momentum in its fifth year. Conceived and sponsored by the Gulf Oil Corporation and legendary Homestead Grays' outfielder Ted Page, it provides an annual opportunity for the best inner city baseball teams to compete against counter-parts in high income suburbs. This year's tournament was played in the heart of Pittsburg's black community on the North Side (below, right). Mt. Lebanon, a Colt team, won the play-off on a near no-hitter pitched by Marty Vuono (shown upper left being congratulated by Pittsburgh Pirate outfielder Al Oliver, center, and the young man, right who spoiled the no-hitter with two out in the ninth). All All-Star team of inner city youngsters then traveled to Mt. Lebanon where they were hosted by the team and township officials to the predominately white and high income community. They played a game, which was won by the All-Stars, had lunch and heard inspiring talks from Al Oliver and Ted Page, below left. Numerous trophies were presented by Cal Grahm of Gulf, (upper right), a former Little All-American basketball star from Cannon College who officiated and coordinated the contest.
