

Two Nevada Teachers Win Awards

Two Nevada teachers have won awards in the International Paper Company Foundation's annual awards program for the teaching of economics.

Recipients are Ann Metzger, a kindergarten teacher at Harley Harmon Elementary School, and Royth Mayes, who teaches kindergarten at Vegas Verdes Elementary School.

The awards were based on descriptions which the teachers submitted of their experiences in teaching economics. Both received their training in economic education in the UNLV Center for Economic Education's inservice program.

The teachers will receive the awards in Houston, Texas, on March 20 at the annual conference of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development. Transportation will be provided them by the Nevada Council on Economic Education.

A total of 188 elementary, secondary and college teachers representing 34 states, Canada and Israel entered this year's competition. Of these, 68 shared $9,250 prize money.

Winning entries will be published next year by the Joint Council on Economic Education in the 14th volume of "Economic Education Experiences of Enterprising Teachers."

The council is an independent, nonprofit organization established to coordinate and improve the teaching of economics in the nation's schools and colleges.

The awards committee consisted of eight men and women who serve on the faculties of universities throughout the country.
