SHOPLIFTING IN NEVADA IS A HANDFUL OF TROUBLE

don't risk it!

TEN TIPS FOR CHRISTMAS TOY SHOPPERS

Here are ten tips for shoppers from Shindana Toys, makers of the world's most complete line of black dolls and games:

Don't underestimate the importance of toys. Children need playthings they can relate to - beginning at a very age. Dolls can help children better relate to people. Toys of all kinds expand children's horizons and heighten their aspirations.

All toys are educational, not just the ones that say they are. It's what toys teach that is important. Buy toys that are positive in what they teach, including toys that teach love. Guns and war toys only teach children to destroy.

Buy toys that promote racial pride. Children become conscious of race at a very early age. Black dolls help black children to establish a positive self-image. Both dolls and games can help children of all races to love those different from themselves.

Don't be sexist. Let little boys play with dolls and little girls play with cars. Both are perfectly natural -- and important -- if children are to take on responsible adult roles.

Buy toys your child wants. Kids are human, and have likes and dislikes similar to adults. Ask your child for suggestions.

Balance your child's toy box with playthings that enhance different types of play. Toys can help build a strong, healthy body; stimulate the world; or help children learn to get along with others. All are important.

Buy toys that are appropriate for your child's age. As children grow, their interests change -- often rapidly. Be aware of your child's current needs, and don't be surprised when these interests change.

Be a smart shopper. Don't buy on impulse; comparison shop. Prices often vary from store to store. If possible, shop early. Many popular toys are sold out early.

Remember toy safety -- both in purchasing toys and once you have them home. Check for sharp edges, points and broken parts. Don't buy toys made either of flammable or highly toxic materials. Ask dealers if items meet established standards for durability, including when dropped, thrown, pushed, bent or tumbled. Repair or destroy damaged toys.

Most importantly, buy toys you can enjoy with your children. Toys can teach a lot, but the most valuable item you can give your child this Christmas is your time.

A Doctor Finds...

Holidays Are Like 'Sex'

Celebrating the holidays is like having sex, in the opinion of a prominent psychiatrist. If you do it without love, you will have momentary pleasure -- and a let-down afterward.

According to Dr. Daniel Offer, acting head of psychiatry at Michael Reese Hospital and Medical Center, Chicago, the sex parallel exists because of our fantasies about the holidays.

"We build up great expectations in our minds," he says. "We expect that the holidays will be wonderful, will give us great feelings of joy and happiness and solve our anxieties and our problems for the future."

In the case of Christmas, Dr. Offer says, "During dinner and the exchanging of gifts, the family is friendly and warm. When those acts are over, the husbands and wives resume yelling at each other, the women go to the dishes, the men to their televised football game and everything is as it was."

He says the same situation occurs when two people who are not in love come together solely to have sex. "After it's over, there is a lonely, empty feeling," he said.

Dr. Offer adds that in both situations the most enjoyment comes from a relationship based on love, which grows over the years. "For both couples and families, feelings of closeness will continue after, if there were feelings of closeness before."

He explains, "The family which is in contact and sees each other regularly, and comes together for the holiday will enhance its closeness. The family that sees one another only at holidays will be strangers again after the holiday, just as they were before the holiday. Just before the next holiday they will again build up their fantasies about how close the family will become."

Similarly, Dr. Offer says, couples who are in love find that each sex act brings them closer together and deepens their relationship with each other.

To prevent holiday let-down, get together with those members of your family who are important and close to you, who you see the rest of the year, he advises.
