CAMPAIGN TO REDUCE CRIME

The Church of Scientology has initiated a campaign to help reduce crimes throughout the state. Members of the church were in downtown Las Vegas this week surveying and talking to local residents to get their ideas on how citizens can help reduce crime.

Similar questions will be asked of the local police in order to get an overall view of how every citizen in the state can do his share in reducing crime.

Rev. Joan Stauffer is heading the campaign. She said, "We feel that every citizen should work to help reduce crime in his area. Part of the problem is that most people do not know that they can help or how."

"First of all," she continued, "is to find out from citizens and then the police ways in which we can all help. Then we will make this information available to the public."

According to Rev. Stauffer, a similar campaign was conducted by the Church of Scientology in New York City. While throughout the city, crime steadily increases, a sergeant of the 6th Precinct of New York noted, "That in the last three or four years, the crime rate in the area of Scientology's Fifth Avenue church has been reduced by over 75 per cent."

The Church established Neighborhood Safety Staffs, which is believed to be a major factor in the reduction of crime in that area. The Church of Scientology here aided the Las Vegas police in apprehending a man guilty of embezzlement in California.

The Church of Scientology is very active in community activities and just recently began a toy drive to gather toys for needy children in the Las Vegas area.

Local citizens should contact Rev. Stauffer at the Church of Scientology if they have ideas and suggestions on how citizens can help reduce crime in their community. All ideas are welcome.
