Before planning a meat meal, consider the costs of all the ingredients. Dairy products and many vegetables have also gone up in price. To equalize meat costs, substitute non-fat dried milk for whole milk or stems and pieces of mushrooms for whole ones. You get the same flavor and nutrition, while cutting overall cost.

Extend meats with tasty vegetables, dumplings, pasta or rice in hearty, well-balanced dishes. For instance, by using a modest amount of ground beef with Hunt's Prima Salsa, you can make a superb spaghetti meat sauce. Feed large families thick, nourishing soups made from inexpensive, bony meat cuts.

Ring for the butcher at the meat counter if you are not satisfied with the meat on display. There is no point in buying more meat than you need or paying for cuts with excessive fat and gristle.
