The International Brotherhood of Painters and Allied Trades is offering a free health and safety seminar for members of the painttrades. The seminar will be held on Saturday, February 2d, at Carpenters Hall, 501 North Lamb Boulevard, in Las Vegas.

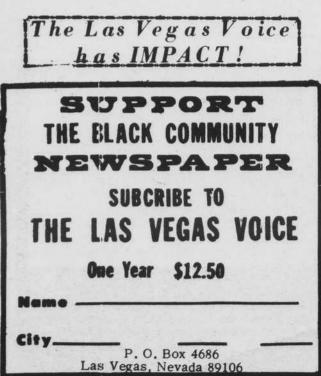

Using dramatic videotape programs to prevent the snoozing and snoring so common during lecture presentations, the program covers a wide range of health and safety hazards, offers tips on seeking professional medical help, explains OSHA standards and policies and worker rights and responsibilities for painters, drywall tapers, sandblasters, floorcoverers and paint makers.

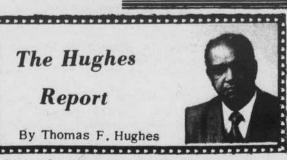

Each person who attends will receive -- absolutely free -- a 272-page training manual and reference guide. This manual eplains respirator selection, provides addresses and phone numbers of OSHA offices, and lists 250 common chemicals of the paint trades, their harmful effects and how to prevent exposure to them.

The seminar is presented by an I.B.P.A.T. General Representative and funded by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. For free, you can't afford not to attend!

Health hazards in the paint trades are serious. Each hour at this seminar could be worth years of life to you.

A recent report from associated press tells of a black Baptist minister from Georgia, the Rev. M. William Howard, was elected president of the country's largest ecumenical body, the National Council of Churches. At 32, he is the youngest person ever to hold the top office.

The post customarily goes to noted veterans of U. S. church life, but representatives of most major U. S. Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations unanimously chose the young Howard, a specialist in racial justice for a three year term.

"Our ecumenical journey is a journey which leads to unity but not to sameness," Howard said in his installation address as the coucil's 252-member governing board ended its threeday meeting in a round of Georgia beat gospel singing and worship.

Howard said unity must overcome the "broken community" among people and restore wholeness across barriers of "race, class, sex, age and physical limitation."

Howard, now of Princeton, N.J., is a slim, urbane American Baptist clergyman who heads the Black Council in another denomination, the Reformed Church in America. He has held various human rights posts in the National Council and World Council of Churches.

He grew up in Americus, Ga. near President Carter's hometown of Plains during a period of civil rights conflicts in that region and was educated at Morehouse College in Atlanta and Princeton Theological Seminary.

As new president of the council comprising

3 denominations and about 40 million members, Howard succeeds William H. Thompson, chief executive of the United Presbyterian Church.

"He is known not only in the United States but the world as a distinguished churchman," Thompson said.

In related events: Thompson said the council's dismissal this week of the Rev. Lucius Walker, who headed its social action agency, did not indicate diminished activity in this arena, as Walker claimed.

The council is just as committed to justice and human rights as it ever was," Thompson said. The firing was based solely over the agency's deficit spending, he said.

victed in New Jersey of spying. The council supported American Indian demands to maintain their "sovereignty as nations" within the United States.

The council condemned the "growing repression" in Necaragua and urged President Carter to suspend all military and economic aid to the Central American government.
