SPORTSWORLD: Spurred by deep religious convictions, Jerry Terrell, an aging utility infielder fighting for a job with the Kansas City Royals, has become a footnote in the history of baseball. Trivia experts will some day recall that it was Terrell who cast the lone negative vote in the 1971-1 tally by which major league baseball players authorized a strike this year. That Terrell was the union's player representative for the Royals will only add to his mystique. Patiently, Terrell refuses to confirm or deny that he was the lone dissenter. But a few days before the team vote was taken, Terrell was overheard telling a teammate: "I'll be a scab if I have to." And a few of Terrell's teammates, while saying that they bear him no animosity, have confided that he indeed is the lone dissenter. And they think he took his stand for religious reasons, and not because he supports the owners in the dispute. A lifetime .255 hitter, Terrell came up with the Minnesota Twins in 1973, at one time or another playing every position but catcher. He signed with the Royals as a free agent in 1978, but he said the most significant year in his life was 1975. "If I hadn't given my life over to Christ in 1975, I would have had an ulcer," he said. "You know me. God first, family second, and baseball is way down there third on the list."

SPORTS WIRE: The NHL's ageless right wing, Gordie Howe, refuses to say whether he has played his final season. Asked about retirement after his Hartford Whalers were ousted from the playoffs by the Montreal Canadiens, Howe, 52, replied: "Don't ask me that question. Ask (Bobby) Hull. He's retired more times than I have." Howe, who started with the Detroit Red Wings in 1946, scored 15 goals and added 26 assists for the Whalers during the past regular season. He also got a goal and an assist in the playoffs. . . . Quotable: St. Louis Cardinals manager Ken Boyer, on Pirates World Series hero Willie Stargell being 39 years old: "He's not that much older than he was in October." . . . Earl (The Pearl) Monroe has been in the NBA 13 seasons and averaged 15.5 points per game in '73.

SPORTS BRIEFING: The 'Love Doubles' match will be held at the specially-created 'Love Doubles Marquee' in the Battersea Park section of London. All proceeds from the Love Doubles will be donated to the Princess Anne's Charities organization. Neither couple has played very much tournament doubles together, thus providing tennis fans with a unique opportunity to see which couple can prepare and execute better. Bjorn Borg and Mariana Simionescu did play some matches together a few years ago when they were teammates in World Team Tennis, and also have competed in a couple of celebrity mixed doubles exhibitions. And Chris and John Lloyds are similarly inexperienced as mixed doubles partners.
