'Summer Semester' sprouts ideas

by Beatrice Gross

It is a delicious spring day. As I sit at my desk writing this column, I think that anyone with a backyard to till and a back that can take the strain must be crazy to spend time indoors at anything but the most necessary task. So, since I am not tied to a 9-5 schedule, I look for ways to get my work done early when the sun doesn't seduce me out-of-doors.

If you have had something you have been wanting to learn and are waiting for the right moment, now is the time to plan a trip to the library or make a note of some TV fare that could help you in your informal study. The full list of national, international, sociological, health and psychological studies now being aired should help. One need only be alert for them.

If you can't decide what you want to learn, but you do have the urge to harness your brain power, try some random skimming of the non-fiction shelves of your library, and consider the coming 'Summer Semester' courses on early-bird TV. CBS's video college courses are an excellent place to start, because they have a built-in structure. Running for a half-hour early mornings in most cities, they are available to people who work 9-5.

This month one can, with a minimum commitment of time and money, study 'Metropolitan America' and 'World Uprooted: The Paradoxes of Modernization,' both produced under the auspices of colleges. The first covers the patterns of big city growth, while the second examines the process of modernization in those nations throughout the world that are evolving from 'traditional' to 'modern.' Combined, the two courses form an excellent before-and-after picture of the benefits and problems of industrialization.

You can, if you wake with the robins in July, take a course on contemporary Spanish fiction and another called 'Reading: For Parent and Child.' The latter gets my special vote. As an educational reformer, I look for ways that parents can be taught secrets of the profession so that they can help their own children. Here is a chance for parents to hear some of the most notable theorists in the reading field and get practical advice. If you read with your child at home, no children will snicker at mistakes, no one will press your child to read faster and both of you will get pleasure from the arrangement.

For a modest fee and writing a few relaxed papers, you can get college credit and a list of reading materials that coordinate with the lectures. For those lucky enough to have a garden, the reading can be done with your feet up and a cool glass of tea within reach. But even viewers without a backyard can use 'Summer Semester' to help themselves get a bumper crop of enriching ideas.

Beatrice Gross has published five books and numerous articles on children, families and education.
