all too easily. As Sadat understood, an optimistic frame of mind can help shape optimistic outcomes. Since his death, we have been treated to a steady stream of doomsday predictions that new outbreaks of war are inevitable. That was the conventional wisdom before Sadat's great breakthrough; such predictions may once again be proved wrong.

Sadat risked all, and in a sense lost all, since his assassination deprived him of his life. But that awful event merely demonstrates the force of irrationality loose in the world, and the dangers to freedom and peace of fanaticism and terror.

All of the world's leaders, from desert princes to revolutionary generals, from the White House to the Kremlin, ought to heed Sadat's wise words that: "I've been able to do with my head what I've never been able to do with guns."

Sadat will be sorely missed by a world to which he sought to bring peace. We needed more Sadats, now we have fewer. Leadership is in short supply.

Klan known as the Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. Bond is president of the law center.

While Dees was reluctant to divulge other data-gathering methods used by "Klanwatch" workers, he suggested that disenchanted or disgruntled Klan members are valuable sources of information.

ces of information.

In addition to compiling published information, Dees said, his group also is turning over to federal prosecutors information gathered on possible violations of federal laws. He said staffers currently are putting together a case which will be presented to a U.S. Attorney that relates to possibly illegal Klan activities.
