appears the President thinks the Great Society programs dominated the seventies and were responsible for the slight increase in the numbers of poor people around 1980.

But again, programs targeted for the poor throughout the seventies were never a budgetary burden — the growth was in programs for the non-poor. Strange too, that his analysis of rising poverty did not include the oil price hikes of the 1970s and the decline of major industries in the face of foreign competition. Incidentally, those foreign firms operate in full-fledged welfare states that spend far more of their budgets than we do on social welfare, so it is hard to see the connection between our economic problems and federal social programs.

And the Administration would be ill-advised to claim credit for the recent slowdown in inflation rates. The drop in inflation was bought at the cost of a general recession and the highest unemployment in post-war history.

It's hard to accept the President's faith that all it takes for poverty to be reduced is an economic recovery. The black experience has been that even a general recovery will leave the black unemployment rate double the white rate.

Meanwhile, the ranks of the poor are growing with a large jump just in the past two years. Clearly, the federal budget cuts, concentrated on those programs that benefit the poor most, are in large part responsible for the growth of poverty.

The Great Society wasn't just an economic program. It raised moral issues and rekindled America's idealistic spirit. It briefly mobilized the nation behind concerns of fairness and compassion. It embodied civil rights laws that are today being undermined.

It is false to suppose that the choice lies between a government that spends on social programs and a government that does not. That choice is really a moral one: between choosing a path of cooperation and compassion and one of privatism and selfishness.

Basically, it comes down to whether we want to be a Great Society or a Mean Society.

GENERAL FACTS ON SMOKING AND HEALTH

Seventy percent of the population believes that smoking should be restricted to fewer places. More than half of all smokers agree to this as well.

A leading life insurance company report shows that the average life expectancy for a 32-year-old man who did not smoke cigarettes was 79 years, compared with 72 years for a 32-year-old smoker.

Blacks are lighter smokers than whites. Eighty-two percent of black smokers go through a pack or less a day, compared to 66% of whites. Thirty-four percent of white smokers though, consume more than one pack of cigarettes per day, compared to 18% of all black smokers.

The annual observance of the Great American Smokeout focuses public attention on cigarette smokers from coast to coast. It's their day! The Smokeout is an upbeat, good natured effort to encourage smokers to give up cigarettes for 24 hours, if only to prove to themselves that they can. Everyone enjoys watching and rooting while they try.
