

Our Leaders Of Tomorrow

By George A. Burns

Name - Morris Arberry
 Occupation - City of Las Vegas Plan Analyst
 Community Status - Present and Future Leader

Aim - "To do what he can do to help make our present conditions better."

Morris Arberry, who has spent a majority of his life here in Las Vegas, has positioned himself to be a "role model", not only for the feels that way, he responded, "Because I don't feel myself to be passive and to accept the unacceptable. It is really important to me to do what I can to help make our present conditions better."

Arberry noted that the youth throughout our entire city are far better off today than they were. "While I've noted that to be the case, I still feel strongly about West Las Vegas needing more concerned youthful leaders. More youths need to become involved."

youths of West Las Vegas, but for the entire city and state as well.

The city Plan Analyst, who has been at that job for over 7 years, majored in civil engineering at Northern Arizona University. As of now, in regards to the city, Arberry's main concern is that of structural engineering. As he stated in the interview his job entails plan checking for commercial as well as residential buildings.

In the passing of the years here in Las Vegas, Arberry has concerned himself very much in both community and personal progress. It was he who almost upset present Assemblyman representing District 7, Lonie Chaney. Arberry, who a few months ago did not specifically rule out the possibilities of seeking elective office again, stated at that time that he "probably" would, but did not commit himself to it for a certainty. However, that young Arberry is currently concerning himself with helping to develop the community in a more cohesive manner and as regards him personally, he feels it very important to "get into the limelight." When questioned as to why he

While Arberry was not critical of the "old guard" of leaders that the community is possessed with, he was very enthusiastic about the upcoming youths. "We (the community's youth) can learn from them, (the elders) their guidance, insight, wisdom and experience. However, by us being younger, we could have brighter ideas, be more vigorous, enthusiastic and aggressive." As to whether or not he considered himself to be a leader, he responded assuredly, "Yes I do."

Arberry noted two essential qualities in leadership, namely integrity and selflessness. "I'm not selfish," he said. He went on with, "I consider myself to be generous and kindhearted. I try to work with and for others, realizing that if I help other people and they're successful, I feel a sense of gratification. Our present political leadership has a pretty bad image now, but I plan on being more concerned with helping my community, and representing it to the best of my ability. Integrity is definitely an essential ingredient in leadership. In leadership of any type, you have to
