UNLV'S CUNNINGHAM SELECTED TO KODAK ALL-AMERICAN TEAM

UNLV's Randall Cunningham, standout quarterback and punter was selected as the first team punter on the 1983 Kodak All-American football team as chosen by the American Football Coaches Association, fulfilling a dream of UNLV's standout punter and quarterback.

While there are other All-American teams such as those selected by United Press International, the Associated Press and The Sporting News, the Kodak team is special to Cunningham because his brother, former University of Southern California star running back Sam "Bam" Cunningham was named to it.

"Sam has a yellow sweater at home with a big patch on it and that's why I always remember he won that award," he said. "And that makes it a big award to me."

"Also, being the first All-American at UNLV, I'm so pleased it's hard to say something. All I can think about is the people who helped me achieve it."

The Kodak team was selected by 137 Division I-A coaches and many observers consider it the All-America team because coaches are better judges of athletic talent than the media, which selected the UPI and AP teams.

Cunningham was somewhat disappointed he was named to the team as punter rather than quarterback but admits his double positions may have been a factor in making the team at all.

"When you look in the newspaper every Tuesday, you see my name in the stats in passing and punting," he said. "When you do a dual duty, it helps you to achieve more goals."

Cunningham averaged 43.5 yards per punt this season but that ranked him just eighth among Division I-A punters. He says he often sacrificed his average to help the Rebels and that may have impressed the coaches. Players were chosen for the Kodak team based on their ability to work within the framework of their college teams as well as their individual performance.

$50,000 PRIZE MONEY IN RICHEST BODYBUILDING EVENT TO BE HELD AT CAESARS PALACE DEC 10-11

The Caesars Palace Circus Maximus Showroom will be the site for the richest bodybuilding competition ever Dec. 10 and 11, showcasing the world's top male and Rachel McLish female bodybuilders. Women in the Caesars Palace event will compete for $50,000 in total prize money, double the top prize awarded in past competitions. The Miss Olympia Contest, which in the past has been known as the most prestigious women's bodybuilding event, presents $25,000 in prize money.

The entire two-day event will be filmed at Caesars Palace for a new motion picture produced by George Butler titled "Pumping Iron II —

The Women," which is scheduled for a summer '84 release.

The women's event will begin Dec. 10 and will spotlight Rachel McLish, the best known female bodybuilder, who will be competing for the first time in 1983. The current Ms. Olympic and women's professional title holder, Carla Dunlap, will also compete at Caesars Palace, along with Lori Bowen, Shelley Gruwell, Sherry Atton and Tina Plakinger.

The men's contest will be held Dec. 11 and will bring together the world's best male bodybuilders.
