Voter registration deadline set

The close of voter registration for the Sept. 4 primary will be 9 p.m. on Aug. 4, Registrar of Voters George Ullom has announced.

The Clark County Elections Department, 400 Las Vegas Blvd. South, is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Beginning next Tuesday through the close of registration the office will be open until 9 p.m.

People who have moved since registering must notify the registrar's office, added Ullom. Addresses may be changed through July 27 by calling the department. After that date, addresses can be changed only by visiting the office.

PSC spokesman Jeanne Hall declined to detail the alleged violations, saying the information would be presented in a show-cause hearing in Las Vegas if commissioners follow the staff recommendation.

Westside Charter has a state permit to operate a shuttle service to transport workers to the Nevada Test Site. The company also has a permit to operate a sight-seeing service in Clark County.

PSC To Hold Hearing On Westside Bus

Nevada Public Service Commission, if it follows staff recommendations, will pull the operating authority from the Westside Charter Service, Inc., it was announced Monday.

A bus company owned by state Assemblyman Lonie Chaney and others could lose its operating license for what state Public Service Commission auditors call "continued non-compliance" with PSC orders and "lax accounting controls."

The PSC staff will ask commissioners next week to schedule a public hearing to determine if Westside Charter should lose its permits in light of recent audit findings.

In a news release, the PSC said an ongoing audit showed "serious problems still exist and the company appears in violation of accounting standards outlined in state law," despite a 1983 commission order to

Woodrow Wilson Resigned Commission Seat — Follows Guilty YOBO Plea

Clark County Commissioner Woodrow Wilson who pleaded guilty last month to accepting a $5,000 bribe from an undercover FBI agent, has submitted his resignation effective last Friday.

Wilson announced his plans in a letter to fellow board members.

"Let me say that serving with the men and women of the County Commission has been one of the most rewarding and challenging experiences of my life," Wilson wrote in the letter released this morning. "Throughout my political career I have sought effective avenues for responding to the needs of my constituency; the County Commission has afforded me such an opportunity."

One June 11, Wilson

and former state Sen. Gene Echols averted a potentially embarrassing two-week trial by pleading guilty to attempted extortion and aiding and abetting in a crime.

Both admitted accepting payoffs from former FBI undercover agent Stephen Rybar in exchange for their political influence. The probe was part of the political corruption investigation code-named Operation Yobc.

Wilson, 68, accepted $5,000 on May 27, 1981, in a meeting with Rybar in the office of Doctors Fiduciary Trust, the investment group the agent pretended to represent.

Echols, 64, accepted $1,000 two days later.

Rybar agreed to give

Wilson a percentage of a $500,000 project, or $5,000 after Wilson said, "I'd be happy to use my influence," according to transcripts of tape recordings.

They will be sentenced on Aug. 3 by visiting U.S. District Judge Richard Bilby, who has heard all five Yobo cases.

Several county commissioners recently expressed displeasure with Wilson for hanging on so long before resigning and drawing a paycheck without earning it.

It will now be up to Gov. Richard Bryan to name a replacement for Wilson, who would have been up for reelection this year.

A spokesman said the governor hopes to select a replacement for Wilson before the next County Commission meeting.

The leading candidates appear to be Clark County Community College counselor Autumn Keyes, longtime Las Vegas businessman and political figure Leonard
