CPB FUNDS NEW MATH SERIES FOR CHILDREN

A major new daily television series to help youngsters improve math skills was awarded $160,000 by CPB.

Children's Television Workshop (CTW), creator of Sesame Street, The Electric Company, and 3-2-1 Contact, received the funds to research and develop the project for six months. After development of a curriculum and format for the math series, CTW plans to seek production funding, tentatively budgeted for more than $13 million.

"Successfully teaching children math is a subject that vexes educators and parents alike," said Edward J. Pfister, CPB president. "The need to learn mathematics — not just arithmetic, but larger mathematical concepts — is central to our ability to keep pace with rapid technological change."

One project objective is to supplement classroom instruction for children eight to twelve years old, by demonstrating math skills applied to day-to-day problem solving. Another objective is to see whether television can convey some of the same mathematical concepts that children study in school.

Initial research will focus on interests and reactions of target-age children by investigating their conceptual level, viewing preferences and comprehension of program content.

The first 65 half-hour programs are projected for home viewing and in-school use as a supplement to class curriculum. Together with 3-2-1 Contact, the new programs will offer a full hour of programming in science and math every weekday.
