rate of unemployment during the recovery was 7.2%, and just crept up to 7.4%. The rate of unemployment during the cyclical business peak of December 1969 was 3.4% and has been climbing at every peak since then.

The economy has been held back somewhat for fear of reviving inflation. There are strong business interests that want to keep squeezing inflation out of the economy, through both high unemployment and a strong dollar. But there are also many people interested in a strong economy and a strong America, enough people, one hopes, to keep Congress from running about in confusion in the face of irresponsible taxing, spending, and monetary policies. The possibilities for the growth of coalitions around alternative policies in the next few years will grow, as the large majority of Americans start to face the consequences of national indebtedness and industrial weakness.

Blacks and labor in particular have an interest in seeing the federal government not only recover the economic strength of the nation but also maintain its role as "promoter of the general welfare." They would therefore counterpropose that the present policies be replaced by a more responsible tax system and policies of high economic growth that would lower unemployment. It ought not be impossible to find allies in promoting those policies and in defending the role of the federal government in advancing the good of all.

What Can We Do?

First, we all can give "thanks and praise" to our heavenly Father for enabling the vast majority of our national Black-led, community-building organizations to come together under the banner of the Assault On Illiteracy Program (AOIP). Never in the history of Black America has a coalition of well over

89 national Black-led organizations ever committed themselves to work collectively—or interorganizationally—in a long-term endeavor to set aright many of America's major injustices imposed on Black America. Never before have many of us been able to see that it takes all of us to work in a collective and coordinated fashion for our betterment, and that of Americans of every hue.
