"THE REPORT CARD"

Communication

Yvonne Atkinson

Communication, knowing who to talk to and how to contact them, is the key to problem solving within the Clark County School District. The School District system, being the large governing body that it is, could be an easy place for any person to get lost in, thus causing frustration and ultimately not solving your concerns. If, as parents or citizens, you have questions, listed below is a brief description of various departments, the names of contact persons and their telephone numbers.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION DIVISION, this division oversees the administration of the educational programs offered in the district's elementary schools. This role is fulfilled through the combined efforts of teachers, classified employees, school administrators, directors, and the associate superintendent, with the support of parents and the community. There are four Directors under this division responsible for various schools in four geographic areas of Las Vegas. If you have any questions pertaining to your child and the schools you can contact Monte Littell at 736-5247 if your child attends schools in the Southwest area of Las Vegas. Herschel Williams at 736-5476 if your child attends schools in the Northwest area of Las Vegas. These Directors have line responsibility for all activities within the division and elementary school.

SECONDARY EDUCATION DIVISION, this division oversees the administration of the educational programs offered in the district's secondary schools. This role is accomplished through the joint efforts of teachers, classified employees, school administrators, directors, and the associate superintendent, with the support of parents and the community.

There are four Directors and one Director is over all student activities for secondary schools under the division of Secondary Education. The responsibilities of each school is assigned to a director depending on the geographic home of the school. Ward

Adult Literacy Project Announced

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 24 — The Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) today announced its intent to commit funds to WQED-TV, Pittsburgh to begin work on a national outreach project on problems of adult illiteracy. Focusing on a PBS television special to be broadcast early in 1986, the effort will be designed to generate community involvement in participating PBS markets.

According to the U.S. Department of Education, 27 million adults in the United States are functionally illiterate and another 45 million are only marginally literate. The pool is growing by about 2.3 million persons each year. Illiteracy bears an annual national cost of billions from reduced earning power, unemployment compensation, crime and welfare. A goal of the awareness and outreach campaign utilized by WQED will be to help launch or strengthen literacy efforts in communities throughout the nation. WQED has a 30-year history of outreach programming, demonstrated most recently in last year's acclaimed spotlight on drug and alcohol abuse, The Chemical People, where 11,000 town meetings were held in conjunction with the program. CPB funds also provide for the establishment of a public television task force to work with WQED about how stations can work in their own communities to strengthen literacy efforts and with other stations on a national basis. The stations were selected to represent a broad geographic area and different licensee types, each with an interest in adult illiteracy. Included in the group are: KCET, Los Angeles; KCTS, Seattle; KLRU, Austin, Texas; WNED, Buffalo, N.Y.; and the state systems of Connecticut, Kentucky, Mississippi, Nebraska, and South Carolina.
