More on these stimulating and enlightening workshops will be forthcoming.

Rounding out the package of ego-strengthening and motivational materials are the following:

1. The AOIP-participating Black community-building newspaper, which inserts The ADVANCER weekly, provides the needed role model reinforcement and other types of uplifting news from the immediate environment. The teacher or tutor can still incorporate these most effectively even if the student is not yet on that reading level.

2. The National BLACK MONITOR (which is inserted monthly) provides such reinforcement from a national perspective.

Without dedicated organizations that are committed to work with others in rebuilding our long-denied Black communities in many needed and different ways, we would remain a hopeless people. Without communications to carry forth any positive message among our people, even a willingness to work together cannot do much.

However with organizations willing to work together and the means of communications to facilitate the process in an ongoing manner, nothing is impossible. AOIP supplies both of these needs.
