

NATIONAL BLACK AIDS AWARENESS EFFORT IS ANNOUNCED IN LOS ANGELES

A special outreach effort to inform the Black community about AIDS prevention was announced in Los Angeles on May 19, by Stephanie Lee-Miller, Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), and Tom Bradley, Mayor of Los Angeles. The effort is in support of the eight-page brochure, Understanding AIDS, produced by HHS and the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). The brochure will be mailed to every American household by June 30.

HHS Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs Stephanie Lee-Miller, who joined Mayor Bradley at the Los Angeles event, emphasized the importance of discussing the facts in the brochure with family and friends. Ms. Lee-Miller is featured in television and radio public service announcements which encourage the public to read the brochure, and share the information with family and friends. The mailing and support activities are part of the federal government's "America Responds to AIDS" education and information campaign.

"The brochure is written at a 7th grade level which may make it difficult reading for some in our communities," Ms. Lee-Miller said. "Those who can read the brochure should share this life-saving information with those who are unable to read it." "There is no vaccine against AIDS. The only vaccine is information about AIDS and about the behavior that places individuals at risk for acquiring the disease," Ms. Lee-Miller said. "We must make sure that everyone has the information needed to avoid exposure to AIDS."

LOS ANGELES MAYOR TOM BRADLEY (center) joins Stephanie Lee-Miller, Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), and Webster J. Guillory, President, National Organization of Black County Officials, Inc., at a news conference in Los Angeles on May 19, announcing a special national outreach by the federal government to Blacks on AIDS prevention. The news conference was called to highlight the mailing of an eight-page brochure, "Understanding AIDS," published by HHS and the Centers for Disease Control, that is being mailed to every American household. Other events focusing on AIDS prevention in the Black community will take place during June in Cleveland, Houston, New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago and Atlanta, as part of the federal government's "America Responds to AIDS" educational campaign.

"This brochure is an important step in our efforts to raise the public's awareness of AIDS and also dispel myths about the disease," Mayor Bradley said in announcing his support for the mailing. "We need to make sure that the message goes out that this brochure is one of the best tools for learning more about the disease in the Black community."

Los Angeles, the largest American city with a Black mayor, was the site of the first of a series of events which will focus specifically on outreach to the Black community in conjunction with the national AIDS mailing. Similar events will take place during June in six other cities: Cleveland, Houston, New York City, Philadelphia, Chicago and Atlanta. Special informational outreach also has been designed for the Hispanic community.

Joining Mayor Bradley and Ms. Lee-Miller at the Los Angeles news conference was Webster J. Guillory, President of the National Organization of Black County Officials, Inc. (NOBCO), based in Los Angeles, is working with HHS and the CDC to develop AIDS education and awareness programs.

Others in attendance at the news conference included

John W. Mack, president of the Los Angeles Urban League, Dr. Caswell Evans.
