war.

We must be intelligent enough, strong enough and determined enough, not to let our casualties outweigh our survivors. The way that we can win this war is by doing "God's way."

By working together, crying together and by struggling together. He has chosen us to be his very, very own. We are the descendents of Adam and Eve, who are "black." And He has promised us that "the first will be the last, and the last will be the first. We must keep our eye on that promise as we struggle through the problems. He is ready to give us this nation because he knows that we, like Job who was also a Black man, will never give up on him. No matter how low we have been, which was "slavery," we have never been so low that we couldn't reach out and hold God's hand. We must get back to what brought us this far—love, trust, friendship, dedication, morals, values and, most importantly, spirituality.

Together we must not forget where we came from. We must build our own businesses, speak out against discrimination, strive for the education of our children and ourselves.

In Proverbs it tells us that a people without a vision perish. I think our vision has been clouded, but the fact that we came together at this Summit indicates that we are on the right track and ready to do whatever it takes to save our race, because we are the "deciding factor."

When we visited the prison, I knew that it would touch a nerve, but I never knew how tender that nerve could be. It was not what I expected at all.

The brothers were receptive, articulate and intelligent. It was like looking at one of you. So when we start developing our implementation strategies, we must include an outreach program. We must go to the governor and push for a fair and equitable parole process and a rehabilitation program.

Young people, I say to you as Malcolm says, "meet one, teach one." Through love and patience we can conquer all. Find one young man or young woman at your school who is not as smart or culturally aware or polished as you are and reach out to work with them and befriend them. And don't ever give up on them. Love them anyway, pursue them because you know what it takes for them to succeed and they can't see it. Don't give up on them, because there was somebody that didn't give up on you. There was somebody who thought you were wonderful and specially made. You be that same somebody to them. Also, you do a lot of talking about "role models." Does it have to be a man? Does it have to be a woman? Your role model is "within you." Know right from wrong. Basically, it's very simple. You have three choices: You excel and work
