

PIC POINT

This week's question:
"What do you feel is justifiable homicide?"

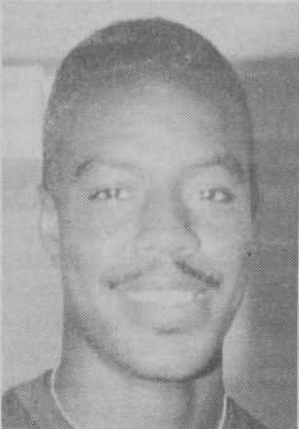

Dr. James McMillian - dentist, to protect oneself if in any immediate danger, however it doesn't mean to be overly excessive in my actions.

Carey Evans - hostess, their is no justifiable homicide except when a white person kills a black person...when a black person kills a white person it is murder.

Dora Harris - bank officer, I can't justify the death of any human being by another, however, when mass murders take other peoples lives its hard to justify that they continue to live.

Tony Willoughby - traffic controller, when one's life is threatened with a deadly weapon and you react off of instinct.

Nobie Bellamy - Security officer, when I feel my life is in danger and I make a decision to protect myself.

couples about Stresses of Interracial Relationship, Rearing Children, Classifying Mixed Children, Perception of African-American Women of Such Relationships, Social Acceptance and other areas of discussion.

Although the first three couples were Caucasian women with African-American men, none of the couples could comment on experience with marriage because they were all single. However, one couple has set a date to marry on September 14, 1991.

Most of the African-American men that were interviewed felt that it was the inner person that attracted them, not so much the social stereotypes such as "White skin being purer then black skin, stringy hair being better than nappy hair, and so forth.

The women interviewed were European-American, Italian-American, Iranian-American and African-American widowed by an Hispanic-American. The African-American woman told the audience about the racism she experienced prior to her husband's death, in raising their five children.

The women interviewed did feel the racial tension that society placed on such relationships as well as the non-acceptance by their family members however, this did not bother them.

The audience raised eyebrows with some questions about the need for African-American men to stick by his African-American woman.. One questioner from the audience said that when an African-American man can speak well, think well and is well educated it seems that the African-American woman is no longer desirable.

Porter's pilot program ran one hour with breaks for commercials. The pilot will be aired sometime in the future. The SENTINEL-VOICE will let you know.

In closing the program, Porter thanked her Production Manager Wendy Nichols and Electronics Engineer, Marcus Ottey, along with Larry Weekly, Marcia Pledger and others who made it a reality. The audience loved it.

Porter's next program topic will be "The Las Vegas Love Connection" for single persons to meet and perhaps date somewhere in the future. Stay tuned for "SPOTLIGHT 90's" future.

The SENTINEL-VOICE wishes to extend "All The Best" to Porter and her staff as they seek to make their dream a reality.
