

NATIONAL ALLIANCE AGAINST RACIST & POLITICAL REPRESSION

BLAMING THE VICTIM FOR THE CRIME

By James S. Tate, Jr., M.D.

I am sure most people have thought, at some time or another, and wondered why so many of the European nations seem to have such a high standard of living while many of the African nations; such as Ethiopia, Sudan, Mozambique, et cetera; have such a low standard of living, why some nations in South or Central America have such a low standard of living.

The Beast would have you believe that the reasons Third World countries have so little and have such a poor standard of living is because of the laziness and stupidity of the populations. While that is a convenient explanation, it flies in the face of the facts of History.

If one studies the History of this planet with any degree of intellectual honesty it becomes very clear that the reason for Europe's rise in the economic sphere was due to the somewhat unique ability and talent of Europeans for bloodletting and conquest. First of themselves and then other indigenous people in other lands. In the case of Africa; Belgium, Portugal, Britain, France, Germany and The Netherlands all share in the rape of that continent blatantly appropriating its vast natural resources for their own use, while brutally subjugating the rightful owners of the land and even, in some cases, attempting naked and blatant genocide to accomplish their needs.

In south and Central America, native Americans (Indians) were massacred to the extent that, in many cases, attempting naked and blatant genocide to accomplish their needs. In South and Central America, Native Americans (Indians) were massacred to the extent that, in many cases, many of the names of the tribes that numbered in the hundreds of thousands are now totally unknown, such as the Aavark.

Indeed, from a historical perspective, if Europeans were left to fend for themselves with no advantage over anyone else, it's likely that the current economic situation would be exactly reversed and in this country, which is basically European by design though not by history, the living standards of those who occupy the top echelons of Capitalist Society would indeed be located in a much different position in the natural order of the world.

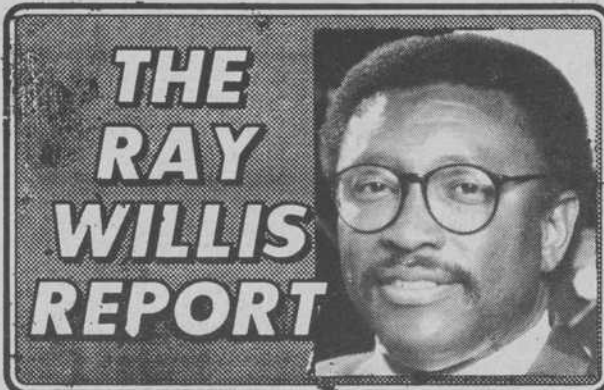

While there has been a tremendous amount of exploitation on the part of the European community of the Third World community, clearly this is beginning to change. The historically mighty capitalist systems are finding their economic systems in total disarray even though the finger is always pointed at the Soviet Union in terms of how terrible its economy is, anybody who has looked out the window lately can see this economy ain't to great either and it can be anticipated that things will get worse before they get much better. Our task then, here, is to remember the historical perspective and from whence the difficulty of an obscenely bloated military budget at the expense of domestic policies and programs came.

The struggle for economic equality and equitable distribution of the planet's wealth among all the planet's people is one that will continue to rage. It would do all of us well in this country to, for once, be on the correct side and understand that what we need is not more Rockefellers, DuPonts or Morgans, but a redistribution of the wealth so that the child in Ethiopia has the equal opportunity to survive and develop in his or her full potential as the child who is born into the family of the Morgans. So that those forty thousand children who die daily from malnutrition, secondary to poverty brought about by ignorance and the greed of the worldwide capitalist monopoly will not have died in vain, it is necessary that we all continue the struggle, for as the economic situation gets bleaker and bleaker, those in power will have no compunction about increasing the number of children dying on a daily basis and bringing that horror home to roost here in this country.

La Lucha continua!
The Struggle Continues!

After Five Negroes

They say that if you take the time to thoroughly study a particular culture, it will eventually reveal its secrets to you a little at a time. On that note, I was recently enlightened to the meaning of a term I had never heard before that was coined by one group of local African Americans to describe another group of Las Vegas-area African Americans: After Five Negroes.

The secretive term is far from complimentary. The phrase I'm speaking of is "After Five Negroes." Do you know what an After Five Negro is? According to my sources, it's a Black person who doesn't live on the Westside. It refers to someone who makes a bee line home from work to the suburbs after five in the evening, to get as far away from Blacks in the 'hood as they possibly can.

"They think distance from the Black community will wash their cares away and they can forget their own blackness," said one source on the subject who asked to remain anonymous.

Obviously, whoever coined the term After Five Negroes feels strongly that people who fit into this category are snubbing their noses at Blacks who live on the Westside.

The underlying factor for attacking After Five Negroes is the ongoing controversy over whether Blacks should be required to live in our "native homeland," the Westside.

At the present time, fewer than 35 percent of all Blacks in the metropolitan Las Vegas area live in West Las Vegas. Viewed from another perspective, though, the Westside still has the largest single concentration of Blacks anywhere in Nevada.

When you examine the facts closely, there are some pretty convincing arguments why blacks should relocate to the Westside. For instance, you instantly reduce the distance barrier that tends to separate better-off Blacks from those less well off. This means there can be a free exchange of information between Black professionals and those who might benefit from such advice.

If Blacks began to move back into the Westside en masse, you would probably see a gradual and eventual dramatic stabilization of the community. Housing values would increase. Banks would be attracted to the area. Schools would be built. Franchise business outlets would be established. Supermarkets would open up.

On the other hand, this is America. It's a free country. A person can live wherever he pleases. But that will never be an acceptable excuse for those critical of After Five Negroes.

The controversy over After Five Negroes reminds me of similar concerns being expressed today about a decline in Black business and dissatisfaction with school desegregation. We thought we won some victories worth winning. But now we're not so sure.

So beware, all you After Five Negroes out there. They know who you are, and you haven't heard the last, yet.

N.L.V. ... THE WESTSIDE STORY

MUST BE A DESCENDENT

By R.K. Brown

Just the other day while waiting to pay a bill, I had an interesting conversation with a fellow in line. He started by saying, "you know it is strange how Europeans claim they discovered America." "There were large groups of people standing and waving on the shore when they landed their boats."

"As a matter of fact, the Europeans weren't used to the climate or surroundings, so many managed to survive, because people." I stated that I was familiar with those facts, so he continued.

"There native Americans showed the Europeans the territory, and guided them through the west." At that point he began to ask questions that I couldn't answer.

"Don't you think it is criminal then, for their leaders to call the Indians savages, when they REALLY fit the description?"

"The Indians only fought for THEIR land after the Europeans drew up fake laws and proposals to take it!"

"During that time the Europeans fought with the most modern weapons known to man." "They had stone forts, guns, railroads, and cannons, while at the same time the Indians fought with sticks and stones." "Knowing those odds I'm sure everyone would pull for the Indians in those classic Western movies."

"Today Europeans talk about how blacks don't respect the living animals in Africa, but they destroyed all the natural life in Europe, then came to America and preceded to do the same, killing millions of buffalo just for fun!" "After they stole the land from the natives, they took them and put them on reservations, finishing the last stage of their master plan...now they feel they
