In his statement, Brown said, "We are extremely pleased that Rev. Jackson will be joining in the Democratic Party's effort to register and turn out voters throughout the country. There is no one more dedicated or more effective when it comes to involving people who have been traditionally shut out of the political process. I reached out to Rev. Jackson for this special effort because he inspires millions of Americans. His record in working for progressive change and empowering and mobilizing people is unmatched."

Since the Democratic Convention in July, Rev. Jackson has been active across the country in registering and mobilizing black voters. He has been involved in voter registration efforts in targeted congressional districts in Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, New York, and Michigan.

Jackson kicked off this new voter registration and mobilization campaign at a National Voter Registration Day Rally at the Washington Monument on Saturday, September 12.

Jackson emphasized the importance of black church involvement in getting Blacks to the polls in his remarks before the National Baptist Convention, USA in Atlanta. Gov. Bill Clinton also addressed the Convention and applauded Rev. Jackson for his leadership and work in getting more American citizens involved in the political process.

YOUR BANK IS MERGING? NO PROBLEM. NOTHING WILL CHANGE.

[NOW LET US TELL YOU ABOUT THE EASTER BUNNY.]

Once upon a time, some big banks decided to merge. Merge, merge, merge. And they told their customers, "Don't worry.

You won't notice a thing."

But alas, some customers did notice a thing. They noticed their branch hours were changing, willy-nilly. They noticed their names were misspelled on their new checks. They noticed certain fees were being hiked, and certain services eliminated. Some of them even noticed their accounts were being traded around like baseball cards. These things made the customers mad. Mad. Mad. Mad. But the big banks pretended everything was just fine. Except for one called U.S.

Bank. This bank had a crazy, wacko way of doing things. When they merged with another bank, they didn't pretend everything would be perfect.

Because, having done a few mergers before, they knew it wouldn't be. And get this, boys and girls. When they made mistakes, as all banks do, the U.S. Bank people could make it all better, right at the branch level.

They could, for example, order a whole new batch of checks for a customer at no charge. They could refund fees that didn't make sense.

Stuff like that. Can you believe it? They didn't even have to check with a Higher

Authority, off in some strange, Faraway

Land, like L.A. And guess what else.

They're opening here in Nevada real soon.

They'll have a total of 30 branches.

They'll keep their promises. And their customers, for all practical purposes, will live happily ever after.
