THE MADNESS ABOUT RAP MUSIC

Richard Griffin, a.k.a. Professor Griff, former member of the rap group "Public Enemy", addressed the problem of recorded music censorship during a heated debate on the UNLV campus.

By Posey Davis

Most rap artists say there is a message in their music, but some people fail to understand their musical language. Critics say rap music is an art that has been misused and has a negative effect on its listeners. Should consumers allow someone else to decide what they should listen to?

An audience of 400 or more music lovers crammed into Artemus Ham Hall on the University of Las Vegas campus last Thursday night, for the Music Censorship Debate.

The debate was sponsored by the Community College of Southern Nevada, University of Las Vegas Student Government Association, KUNV-UNLV Radio Station and the Black Students Association.

Attorney Jack Thompson and Richard Griffin, known as "Professor Griff," formerly of the rap group "Public Enemy," deliber-

Richard Griffin, "Professor Griff" says music is universal. He believes music should not be censored. Griffin says his music
