and women who have dropped out of school, want to learn meaningful job skills, want to improve their physical conditioning, continue to work on the G.E.D. and make $5.50 per hour. The criteria for such applicants is as follows:

1. Between the age of 17-21
2. Economically disadvantaged
3. School drop-out
4. Able to pass a physical and drug screening
5. Eager to LEARN & EARN!

Mr. David Hicks, President of Nevada Business Services commented: "The objective of NEBCORP is to provide meaningful training and work experience for young men and women who have dropped out of school, are willing to work toward the attainment of their G.E.D., earn a respectable income while they are learning meaningful work skills and be willing to apply themselves in both the work and training environment."

NEBCORP trainees are

CSU DESIGNATED WESTERN REGIONAL GRADUATE PROGRAM

Colorado State University's master of science in Technical Communication has just been designated a Western Regional Graduate Program by the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education (WICHE).

This designation means that applicants currently residing in 13 Western states (including Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico,

No. Dakota, Oregon, So. Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming), if admitted, may enroll in the Technical Communication graduate program at Colorado in-state tuition rates.

The Technical Communication program prepares students for management responsibilities in technical communication and public relations.

The curriculum emphasizes audience research, strategic planning, and systematic evaluation from a social science perspective.

The program is closely affiliated with the Center for research in Writing and Communication Technologies, recently identified by Colorado State University as under the direction of a certified contractor and learn working skills in the areas of carpentry, painting, drywall, and other related construction skills.
