MARIAN WRIGHT EDEL CALLS FOR 'MASSIVE MOVE TO CONVINCE GOVERNME

Edelman, founder and president of the Children's Defense Fund. has called for "a massive, insistent movement" to convince the White House and the Congress that all children are essential to America's future.

"If recent trends continue, by the end of the century, poverty will overtake one in every four children," Edelman said in an interview to be published this Sunday in PARADE magazine.

"One thing this country does not understand," Edelman told PARADE Contributing Editor Wallace Terry, "is that we don't have a child to waste. We will not be a strong country unless we invest in every one of our children. We need the poor black kid, the poor brown kid, the poor white kid to be productive."

Edelman, whose Baptist minister father taught her that a young black girl growing up in the segregated South could be and do anything, declared, "There was never a time I didn't know segregation was wrong. I hated it. I cannot to this day stand being excluded."

The first black woman to be admitted to the Mississippi bar, Edelman also hated law school, but an incident during a civil rights demonstration fueled her determination to graduate.

The incident, she recalled, occurred during a voter-registration march in Greenwood, Mississippi, when demonstrators were met by club-swinging policeman who turned loose their police dogs.

Jackson," she said, "but they were 100 miles away. The FBI was standing there and not doing anything. I was so outraged. I realized how isolated the people there were, totally at the mercy of local authority."

"It convinced me to get through law school," she added. "I hated every minute of it. What kept me there was knowing I was needed in Mississippi."

Edelman, who founded the Children's Defense Fund in 1973 and has worked tirelessly on behalf of disadvantaged children ever since, said small gains were made in the Nixon and Carter years, culminating in a child welfare act in 1980.
