When the effort to bring African American students back to community schools within their own neighborhoods began in late 1991, few anticipated this dream would become a reality. This effort was the brainchild of the WAAK-UP organization whose sole purpose was to provide a better learning environment for community children who had endured the brunt of the Civil Rights era busing programs. Now as the Clark County School District has provided the Prime 6 initiative which allows parents to keep their children within neighborhood boundaries, WAAK-UP reasses it's goals and finds new direction.

Critics called the organization too radical and misdirected for going against the grain of integration. With shock, publicity tactics and community action, Nevada Governor Bob Miller (R), along with Marzette Lewis, president of WAAK-UP (L), made a personal appearance recently at teacher Lorraine Robinson's (C) class at H.P. Fitzgerald Elementary School.

Speculation has arisen that longtime executive director of the Economic Opportunity Board (EOB), James Tyree, is under fire from the organization's board of directors. EOB, which comprises of some 23 social service programs, has provided services for the needy for over two decades.

Tyree, who is currently on an extended medical leave, has been previously targeted by the board for ineffective direction and a lack of response to guidance. During a general board meeting on Wednesday, October 27, meeting agenda item #4 required all nonessential participants to exit the meeting room. Board members discussed Tyree's status during a closed door meeting, and provided no comment upon exit.

Tyree was not present for the meeting and was subsequently unavailable for comment. He has, however, been subject to numerous criticism relating to EOB's management of its radio station, KCEP 88.1 FM, and transportation program, which has been plaqued by numerous complaints of poor service and inadequate equipment.

The transportation services has also been spotlighted by the Clark County Regional Transportation Commission (RTC) for possible fusion into the impending county managed work. While meeting the needs of various disadvantaged persons throughout the Las Vegas valley, EOB's inability in the past to keep pace with booming growth has been another source of scrutiny. Waiting lists for critical services have been known to extend in the hundreds. Budgeting and financial planning issues have also plagued the organization. Additionally, the organization's reputation as a "closed society" with an inattention to its clients has been a point of dissent.

Insiders confirm Tyree's inflexibility and inability to deal with board members. Some have typified his actions as "arrogant" and "obstinate" when challenged on various issues.
