MINORITY HEALTH

Low birth weight, a significant factor in infant mortality, has been generally stable at about 7 percent of all births, but very low birth weight has been increasing.

For black infants there was an 18 percent increase in very low birth weight, compared with a 6 percent increase for white infants between 1980 and 1990. The rise in very low birth weight infants parallels the increase in preterm births (less than 37 weeks gestation) over the past decade as well as the continued rise in births to unmarried mothers and the recent jump in teen-age births.

About a quarter of mothers do not get early (first trimester) prenatal care. For Hispanics, blacks and American Indians, some 40 percent do not get this care.

In 1991, the overall infant mortality rate was 8.9; 7.3 for whites. 17.6 for blacks and 7.5 for Hispanics.

* Provisional data indicate that AIDS, ranked 9th in 1991, increased again in 1992 to become the 8th leading cause of death. The death rate for AIDS increased nearly 60 percent from 1987, when it was the 15th leading cause of death, to 1989, but has increased at a less rapid pace since then, up 10 percent from 1991 to 1992

The AIDS death rate per 100,000 for the 25-44 age group is 19.8 overall, but 52.8 for blacks and 28.7 for Hispanics.

* Regarding differences in risk of disease and death by race and ethnicity, the report found that Asian Americans had the lowest death rates for many of the major causes of death while black Americans and Hispanics had higher death rates for many of those causes.

For example, in 1988-90, Asians 45 years and over had the lowest age-adjusted death rate for heart disease, about 25 percent lower than the rate for Hispanics and American Indians, close to half the rate for white Americans, and 63 percent lower than that for blacks.

*Considering the percentage of minorities living in urban areas, the report carries another distressing example of disparities based on age-adjusted mortality rates by urbanization. Death rates are lowest in the suburbs, 12 percent higher in rural counties and 19 percent higher in large core metropolitan counties. During the '80's, death rates declined 10 percent in the suburbs but only by half as much in the inner cities.

*A strong relationship was shown between educational level and mortality, another area in which minorities lag. Death rates in 1989-90 for men and women aged 25-44 without a high school education were about three times the rates for college graduates. Among middle aged men and women there was about a two-fold difference.

Copies of the report, prepared by the National Center for Health Statistics, part of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, can be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Request stock number 017-022-01218-9; price $29. A pocket version with highlights of the report is available free from NCHS, 6525 Belcrest Road, Hyattsville, Md. 20782.

network solutions to the issues of alcohol and substance abuse. According to Miller, too much emphasis is placed on the problem while the cause and treatment alternatives suffer from inattention. "We want to move the focus from locking people up to treatment," said Miller. The BASIC program recently celebrated its 10th year in servicing the citizens of its home state of Missouri. As a nonprofit organization, Miller said BASIC performs the same comprehensive counseling process that would cost in excess of $25,000 if performed by for-profit businesses. Miller cites the impor-

Miller, a former heroin addict, said the program's success is based upon the cultural emphasis. The program directs clients to realize responsibility to themselves as well as their race. "If we are racially, politically, and economically depressed, then who among us can afford not to be sober at all times," said Miller. He continues to stress that his organization boasts of an 85% success rating with its clientele and a 98% employment rate

Once graduated, former abusers join the ranks of the alumni, who provide volunteer support for new clients entering the program.

The program also strives to correct the many cultural misconceptions of inferiority and inadequacy, according to Miller. He said the problems of alcohol and substance abuse can be traced from generation to generation. In his case, Miller said his father's alcoholism manifested itself in his own abusive behavior when he was a college student. Miller, who at one time earned a six-figure income as a trucking company owner, was catapulted to the ranks of the homeless and downtrodden. Miller spent 14 years in a downward spiral, losing his family and business. that of ensuring that the kids stay out of trouble.

As a resident of the area, Rabb grew up near the Gerson Park area and recalled the countless fights he got into as a youth. "It's really funny," he said, " to see kids getting into the same nonsense you got into." He said he shares his experiences with the youths and attempts to steer them in positive directions.

Both Hal and Rabb said the center must continue to have the same level of positive response if it is to remain open to service the needs of the kids. The center plans a neighborhood Thanksgiving Feast and is accepting donations.

every three African-Americans suffer from hypertension — a "silent killer" because it usually appears without symptoms. The disease strikes black men the hardest, affecting them earlier in life than their white counterparts.

Taylor said that hypertension is seven times worse in patients with diabetes and often leads to a heart attack, kidney failure or stroke if left untreated.

"Diabetics and people who are overweight are especially vulnerable to complications associated with the disease," he

"If you are obese, you should add regular exercise to your health plan to reduce your cholesterol level and keep your weight down."

For a heart-healthy holiday celebration, Taylor recommends the following:

* Drink alcoholic beverages in moderation — one or two a day at the most. At parties, designate a driver.

* If you haven't been checking your blood pressure regularly — start. Many supermarkets and drug stores offer free blood pressure monitoring.

* Consult a physician if your blood pressure exceeds 120 over 80. A low-fat diet, regular exercise and antihypertensive drugs may be prescribed.

* If you are on medication, take it regularly. Pack an ample supply if you are going out of town for the holidays.
