of the heavyweight division," Seldon, who hails from Atlantic City, N.J., became the WBA heavyweight champion when he stopped Tony Tucker in the seventh round of their title fight at Caesars Palace in April 1995.

Seldon (33-3, 29 KOs) is unbeaten in nine fights since 1992 and no fighter has gone the distance with him in more than three years.

It will be Seldon's second defense of his WBA crown.

Tyson's WBC title is not at stake in the fight. Should the former undisputed champion lose, Seldon, 29, would not claim Tyson's belt as the WBC title would become vacant. Seldon's WBA crown, however, is at Fighting out of Southington, Ohio, Tyson (44-1, 38 KOs), despite having only 16 minutes and 51 seconds in the ring in the last five years, still shows the awesome hand speed and power that made him the most feared fighter in the past decade.

Also on the card will be International Boxing Federation (IBF) welterweight champion Felix Trinidad (29-0, 25 KOs) of Puerto Rico as he defends his 147 pound title for the 10th time against No. 9 contender Ray Lovato (21-1, 11 KOs). In addition, IBF and WBC 154 pound champion "Terrible" Terry Norris (43-6, 27 KOs) will put his titles on the line against the IBF's No. 6 contender Alex Rios (18-2, 14 KOs), while women's pound-for-pound champion Christy Martin (35-2-2, 25 KOs), makes her third appearance on a major card.

"I'm in great shape," Seldon said at an open workout Monday at the MGM. "On Saturday night I'm the champion and I'm going to fight like the champion."

Tyson, on the other hand, says he's the better of the two, and is confident he will dispose of Seldon.

"Today, I'm a better fighter," Tyson says. "I'm more mature, and I've cultivated my skills more."
