Hate

What is driving young white boys to these murderous acts? What are the commonalities and what are the differences between the present epidemic of youth violence and the earlier one in urban neighborhoods? We must recognize that beneath the murderous hatred of these killers lies a profound, boiling rage that comes from an even more profound sense of inadequacy and pain.

What is causing this?

For all our sakes, America must take this opportunity to explore the racial issues embedded in these differing but connected outbreaks of significant youth violence.

As the reigning superpower, America tries to shield the world from terrorism.

But the terrorism in our schools and the terror in the hearts and minds of many of our children, on all sides of the color line, cry out for attention, too.
