person to actually land in jail. These kids, while on probation, placed their intentions on a web site and were visited by a sheriff when a parent complained and identified it as a top hate site. No one did anything.

We know that the Black community of Denver would have been placed on quarantine had anything approaching the Columbine tragedy been attributed to an African-American.

I think we should celebrate the fact that, despite the provocation of "driving-walking-flying while Black" and all the other prejudice that Black youth and adults face, in addition to the memories of 400 years of racism, we still have the humanity not to plan to blow up a federal building or a school or to drag anyone behind a pickup truck.

And we should really appreciate the fact that young Black men want to know where the Federal Reserve Bank is.

Osteoporosis

• Ask your doctor about new drugs to prevent and treat osteoporosis. You might be a candidate for hormone replacement therapy or for other drugs that help reduce bone loss and increase bone density.

None of us wants to end up in a wheelchair or unable to lift our grandchildren or our groceries. So talk to your doctor now about creating a custom-made plan for preventing osteoporosis.

PLEASE DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO REMAIN STRONG AND ACTIVE FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE.

If you want to look for rare beings, look for male African-American college basketball players who graduate with degrees they can utilize to secure meaningful employment should they not make it into the NBA (and most of them will not).

Here is a final thought: What would happen if instead of merely listing where professional basketball players played their college ball, TNT or CBS put up a graphic that listed the academic degrees these players earned upon graduation?

You might think that it doesn't matter by then, but it does. There are many players who become injured or who can't make a career in the NBA, who waste their millions, but who aren't qualified to do a thing beside play basketball. It happens all the time, and demonstrates that our emphasis ought to be on making sure that our students are qualified in every way, and not merely exploited for someone else's benefit.
