Bush and New York City Mayor Rudolph W. Gulliani have led many other political, religious and civic leaders in forcefully spurning such ideas. They rightfully understand that the way out of grief for the nation — the best way to pay tribute to all the innocents who lost their lives in this tragedy — is to build out of its many diverse elements a better, stronger, more unified American people.

They and others who are leading the call for national unity understand that, now more than ever, this worthy sentiment has to be more than skin deep.
