Honorees and guests on hand to view the telecast of the Trumpet Awards, hosted by Fitzgeralds Hotel & Casino downtown, could adequately be described as a who's who collection of African-American success stories.

We have a new owner at the Golden Nugget, the Four Queens, new owners with substantial resources at the Horseshoe, and our location, so the future of downtown is brighter than it was before."

Last month, Pollard was grand marshal of the King Day parade. He was honored for community service in Las Vegas, where he, along with wife Diane, are founders of educational programs to help disadvantaged youth, the Academy of African-American Studies in Nevada and hosts the city's annual Juneteenth festival. For the past 15 years, Pollard has operated Rainbow Medical Centers.

"I'm very humble to be honored among so many other honorees because a lot of these peoples are heroes of mine," Pollard said. "To be in the presence of them and receive this honor is a great thing."

Xernona Clayton is executive producer of the Trumpet Awards and corporate consultant for Turner Broadcasting Systems Inc.

The show was taped on Monday, Jan. 26 at the Omni Grand Ballroom in Atlanta.

Fitzgeralds remains successful, Barden noted, while other downtown properties have faced difficult times and forced to shutdown.

Pollard said, "Working with Ms. Xernona Clayton at the Trumpet Awards makes you feel better, makes you want to reach out and give more, and I hope being this type of role model will help others to want to do more and be more."

Hayes, a Grammy Award-winning recording artist, said, "That's the importance of the Trumpet Awards. Here's a young black boy from Covington, Tenn., raised by share-cropping grandparents, grew up in poverty, and my struggle was hard, but I made it and to be honored and stand as a symbol for other young people and other African-Americans anywhere in the Diaspora is wonderful."

Tucker, who received the Leadership Trumpet, is the former secretary of state in Pennsylvania and women's rights activist.

"I have received many awards but this award is more important to me than the 'People Magazine' as one of the most 100 intriguing women because this came from an organization that I respect," Tucker said. "This (See Trumpet Awards, Pg. 8)

Citizens sought to serve on Metro's Use of Force Board

The Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department is accepting applications now through March 31 for citizens to serve on its Use of Force Board (UFB).

Established in May 1991, the board's mandate is to review actions of police officers where citizens allege excessive use of force or other violations of the police code of conduct.

"(This is) a board assembled to review the actions of officers," said Deputy Chief Greg McCurdy, who heads the Investigative Services Division. "It's a good opportunity to address policies and tactics."

The board is made up of four citizens and three law-enforcement officers. (LVMPD) officers are chosen randomly from a list of eligible candidates. Applications may be obtained at any Metro substation. The UFB meets once a month at a predetermined time from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Qualified UFB applicants must reside within metro's jurisdiction and may not be affiliated with or a relative of a southern Nevada peace officer. All members of the board will receive six hours of training. Appointments are for two-year terms with reappointment once.

According to McCurdy, who chairs the board, UFB hears between 20 to 30 cases per year. He thinks the group's input reaches the level of saving the lives of citizens and police officers.

Incidents that fall under the review of UFB include the following:

- Incidents when a person is seriously injured or killed by a department member using any type of force, except traffic accidents.

- Actions by a member that could have resulted in death or serious injury.

- Deliberate shootings by a member at another human being, regardless of injury or damage

Review of an incident is compiled in a report submitted to Sheriff (Bill Young) for executive determination.

For further information, call McCurdy at (702) 229-3511 or visit Metro's Web site at www.lvmpd.com.
