(Continued from Page 5) should be the basis for further achievements," Kagame said, citing the introduction of multiparty politics and the prevailing peace and security in the small central African nation.

However, Kagame also hit at Rwandan insurgents based in neighboring Congo and their political leaders, who are mainly in Europe. The rebels include members of the former army and Interahamwe Hutu militia who played a central role in the genocide — and fled to Congo when Kagame ousted the extremist government.

"We shall not compromise the security of our country. We shall resist any group that attempts to destabilize our country like we have done in the past," Kagame said. "We shall fight it like any other war we fought and won."

The ceremony was also attended by former rebel commanders who were integrated into the Rwanda Defense

Forces and awarded senior ranks on Friday.

The ranks were awarded in a first step toward giving the former rebels senior positions in the military.
