scholars and activists will address the topic "The Challenge of Blackness Revisited," an examination of the issues discussed in Lerone Bennett Jr.'s milestone book, which Daniels said influenced the direction of the original IBW in the '60s.

Forum panelists will include Howard Dodson, president of the Schomburg Center for Research in Black History and Culture; noted author and political scientist Ronald Walters; Ramona Edelin, co-chair of the Issues Committee for the Millions More Movement; Herb

Boyd, author, columnist and political commentator; Nkechi Taifa, senior policy analyst for the Open Society Institute; Columbia Law Professor Kimberle Crenshaw, and poet, author/publisher, political activist Madhubuti. "It's been a real privilege to serve as executive director of [the Center for Constitutional Rights] at a critical moment in the history of this country," said Daniels.

"But now, I feel it is imperative that I use the knowledge and experience I have gained from various movements over the years to create a progressive think/action mechanism to defend the interests of people of African descent and other oppressed people."
