

Rice

"The camaraderie you built with your teammates was special. The relationships you build then stick with you the rest of your life," he said.

Others being inducted into the hall Saturday included Southern California tailback Anthony Davis, Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback John Huarte of Notre Dame, Stanford defensive tackle Paul Wiggin and Michigan defensive back Tom Curtis, along with former Auburn coach Pat Dye and former West Virginia coach Don Nehlen.

The men being honored were in a parade in the morning, then held a youth football clinic and a flag football game in the afternoon.

Keith Dorney, an offensive tackle at Penn State, was the game's MVP with two TD catches and three catches overall for 40 yards — compared to two catches for Rice for 26 yards and one touchdown.

Bennett, who threw two touchdown passes, said the festivities were fun.

"Twenty years ago I never thought all this would be possible, yet here we are," said Bennett, who won the Lombardi Trophy in 1986.

Much of the talk Saturday centered on how special college was. Player after player talked about how much fun it was compared to the businesslike NFL.

"You don't have all the rigmarole that goes along with it," Bennett said. "At college you had no bills, just a cavalier lifestyle."

But Rice said not everything in college was fun and games. Going to a small school like Mississippi Valley State forced him to work harder to reach his goals.

"It molded me into the player I became," he said.

Rice, generally regarded as the greatest receiver of all time, retired from the NFL with 38 records and three Super Bowl titles. He said he's happy his induction into the hall is bringing some attention to Mississippi Valley State.

"It's the icing on the cake," he said.

Roosevelt Leaks was part of an accomplished players' class recently enshrined into the College Football Hall of Fame.
