 roster for Wednesday night's game against the Los Angeles Clippers — two fewer than the NBA minimum required to avoid forfeiting a game.

The Warriors quickly signed NBA Development League forward Renaldo Major a 10-day contract, and they planned to suit up injured center Adonal Foyle to avoid the forfeit.

Harrington was one of the Warriors' top targets in free agency last season, but went back to Indiana — where he started his career — in a sign-and-trade deal with Atlanta. He averaged 15.9 points and 6.3 rebounds this season, second on the team in both categories to O'Neal, who plays much the same position.

"That's the heartbreak in it," Walsh said. "He would have fit in here, but he was playing (small forward) more than he was playing (power forward). I'm not sure he's a good fit at (power forward) with Jermaine. When you really looked at it, I don't know if the two players complemented each other as well as we thought they could."

O'Neal, frustrated with Indiana's mediocrity, called it a "bold move" — though it meant the departure of his close friend Harrington.

"Everybody expects me to go into such a tirade about one of my better friends in Al Harrington being traded," O'Neal said. "I'm hurt on a personal level. On a business level, we all understand it's a business. My job is to come out and make sure that the guys that we have left step their games up, and the guys coming in are comfortable and are accepted to this team."

Murphy, a former Notre Dame star battling injuries this season, is averaging 8.9 points and 6.0 rebounds — both his lowest totals since his rookie year. Dunleavy, the No. 3 overall pick from Duke in 2002, has scored 11.4 points in another disappointing season, so the deal rids the Warriors of three players who didn't fit with Nelson's ideas.

Mullin signed Dunleavy and Murphy to contract extensions — still worth more than $80 million — before he hired Nelson.

The Warriors pursued Harrington because the rangy forward should fit their new style of play.

"Al is a guy we've looked at for a while," Mullin said. "Al is a guy that's probably a lot stronger than people know. He can guard his man in the post if need be. He's gotten better over the years."

Jackson has a sharp outside shot, but has been almost nothing but trouble for the Pacers since his involvement in that infamous brawl in the stands at Detroit two years ago. He was involved in a fight outside an Indianapolis strip club on Oct. 6, and is scheduled to go to trial Feb. 12 for firing a gun during the fracas.

"We feel strongly that a lot of those things are behind Stephen, and he's looking to come here, win games and focus on his basketball career," Mullin said.

Matthew Symons, spokesman for the Marion County prosecutor, said the trade will not affect Jackson's court case. Mullin said the Warriors will support Jackson's legal needs.

Last month, the Pacers briefly suspended Jackson for a heated exchange with Carlisle, who kicked him off the bench during a loss to Cleveland. The Warriors' last look at Jackson was impressive, however: Earlier this season, Jackson hit a 3-pointer with 1 second left in a 108-106 victory at Golden State.

The Warriors were keen to acquire Jasikevicius, a Lithuanian who failed to meet high expectations in Indiana. Powell was traded to Indiana last summer after his rookie season with Dallas, and his smooth game also could fit well with Nelson's up-tempo style.
