

Nagin: Bureaucracy marring Katrina recovery

Special to Sentinel-Voice
NEW ORLEANS (NNPA) - Despite the wreckage that still remains from Hurricane Katrina's assault on New Orleans two years ago, the city's Mayor Ray Nagin says he is encouraged despite the U.S. Congress' ignoring serious mental health problems among residents.

"We as a city are open; the population continues to grow at levels above what the experts projected. We now have a viable economy to support jobs and to support this growth. The economy is really showing good signs," Nagin said.

"I'm also really starting to feel as though we're starting to turn a corner with the police force. We've stabilized it, the attrition rate is down and the recruitment rate is tremendously up. We had the largest recruit class in the history of the NOPD."

The mayor continues, "Overall, in the criminal justice system we finally got it to the point where it's starting to work better together. I had a one-on-one with the D.A. and told him that I wouldn't be able to support him going forward if he continued to release potential murderers without talking to folks. He's been talking and we've been communicating very well."

Nagin says his efforts to get Congress to address the city's mental health crisis have been pushed aside as more focus has been given the projected Road Home shortfall. He said because he has read about the ongoing mental health problems children in New Orleans face as a result of the storms of 2005, he is committed to continuing to fight for funds to address those needs.

Also, despite efforts to undermine the recovery, the city continues to gain ground slowly in the process, he says.

"The money is bottled up right now, but at some point it's going to flow," an upbeat Nagin said. "We have defied the odds by working through all the strangulation points that have been put in front of us... with the Road Home, insurance, [power company] rates, etc. Folks are still coming back to this city at a pretty high level. He added, "Now, we got major work to do. ...Our streets are falling apart, we still have a rental housing crisis and the mental health of the community concerns me the most right now... I recognized this problem a couple of months ago, started talking about it with the governor, wrote her a letter and they just kind of blew us off."

"We now have a viable economy to support jobs and to support this growth. The economy is really showing good signs."

— Ray Nagin
Mayor New Orleans

The mayor has encouraged residents to use the second-year observance of Hurricane Katrina to exert pressure on the Bush Administration and members of Congress to give New Orleans and other areas along the Gulf Coast affected by Hurricane Katrina what they sional and state representatives and the White House to demand the restoration and betterment of New Orleans, Gulf Port, Biloxi and the entire Gulf Coast region.

The telephone number for the White House switchboard is (202) 456-1414; the U.S. Congressional switchboard operators at (202) 224-3121 connect callers directly to their Senators' and Representatives' offices, after asking for a state of residence and zip code.

Regional co-conveners for the Day of Presence include Mayor Nagin; Ninth Ward Council representative, Cynthia Willard-Lewis; committed activist/lawyers Tracie Washington, president and CEO of The Louisiana Justice Institute; Judith Browne, co-director of the Advancement Project, and Rev. Norwood Thompson Jr., president of the New Orleans chapter of SCLC.

The Louisiana Justice Institute is the lead organization and is forming a broad coalition of regional and community-based groups to plan the day's program and work on the regional turnout.

"This anniversary is an opportunity for us to change the dialogue a little bit," Nagin said last week.

"And if we can, I would like for us to not come across as whining. We want to state our problems and the fact that we still have needs, but I would like to present more examples of how [residents] are overcoming in spite of the odds... It's still important to point out that America still hasn't done right by us, but look at the resiliency of the people of New Orleans and what we are doing."

Among those expected to be in New Orleans to mark the two years that have passed since Hurricane Katrina and the Great Flood of 2005 are Rev. Al Sharpton, Rev. Jesse Jackson, Essence executive Susan Taylor and actresses Lynn Whitfield and Victoria Rowell.

A groundbreaking ceremony for the Katrina memorial was followed by a bell-ringing ceremony for Katrina's victims.

Elected officials and celebrities are expected to flood the city as it prepares to mark the second anniversary of Hurricane Katrina and its aftermath. The city has reached out to all of the presidential candidates and invited them to attend various events commemorating the tragedy, according to planners.

Said Nagin, "There [has been] a growing movement for people to come to New Orleans from around the country that day. Some people want to come and help and stand with us."

Sentinel-Voice photo by Ramon Savoy

Kenya Pierce adds another symbolic house representing the devastation of the Gulf Coast during the hurricanes of 2005. Two years, later many families are still displaced in Las Vegas and haven't received sufficient government assistance.

Katrina

(Continued from Page 1)

forget that over a thousand people lost their lives... and there are many who are still putting their lives together who need your assistance and your support," Gibson said.

That is why on this second anniversary Gibson felt it necessary to reach out and demand that Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev., along and fellow Republican Rep. Jon Porter work with Democratic Sen. Harry Reid in securing the millions of dollars to bring the city back." Local Democrats participated in the remembrance.

Watson echoed the same concerns and took it one step further, encouraging the other supporters attending to immediately call Porter's office on their cell phones.

"If we continue to be quiet, then they will continue to send money overseas (to the war in Iraq)," Watson said.

to treat your family like our family

We promise

The commitments we make are commitments we intend to keep. That's why you can trust our promise to treat your family like our family. To help keep your policies up to date with regular insurance reviews. And to give you honest, straightforward answers. For the name of an agent near you, visit amfam.com.

American Family Mutual Insurance Company and its Subsidiaries
Home Office - Madison, WI 53783
© 2007 002589 - 3/07

All your protection under one roof®