

Vick

(Continued from Page 12) of dogfighting, said Steven Benjamin, a Richmond defense lawyer who is not involved in the case. The prosecution will likely argue that that's enough of a difference to allow the charges to proceed, he said.

Surry County Commonwealth's Attorney Gerald G. Poindexter told The Associated Press on Monday night that he would seek indictments on different crimes than the ones in the federal case. The charges now pending are the first leveled against Vick in the county where he bought property in 2001 that became the base of the dogfighting operation, and where local investigators first uncovered evidence of the illegal enterprise. Poindexter walked away from television cameras outside the courthouse and told reporters he was not disappointed the grand jury passed on the dog killing counts.

"I'm just glad to get this to the position where it is now and, one day in the not too distant future, we will be rid of these cases," he said on his way to his car.

In a written statement, Poindexter and Sheriff Harold Brown attempted to dispel any notion that race influenced the grand jury. Brown, Poindexter and the four defendants are Black, as are four of the six grand jurors.

"These are serious charges, and we can assure you that this grand jury was not driven by racial prejudice, their affection or lack of affection for professional athletes, or the influence of animal rights activists and the attendant publicity," the statement said.

Vick has already pleaded guilty in federal court to a dogfighting conspiracy charge and is awaiting sentencing on Dec. 10.

In pleading guilty to the federal charges, Vick admitted helping kill six to eight dogs, among other things. He faces up to five years in prison.

Vick's co-defendants had pleaded guilty earlier and detailed Vick's role in the grisly enterprise.
