Biographical Note

Early Las Vegas pioneer Leon Halliday Rockwell was born in Elmira, New York in 1888. He received a grammar school education and was then forced to begin working due to the death of his father. He worked a variety of jobs across the country from railroad laborer to cowboy and milk-hand. He joined his brother Ronald in Las Vegas, Nevada in 1906, along with his brother Earl Rockwell. The brothers became prominent citizens of Las Vegas, and Leon and Earl constructed the first airfield in Clark County, Nevada and leased it to Western Air Express in 1920, which opened the city to air transportation.

Leon Rockwell worked for the Telephone Company and Power Company before opening his own business, The Electric Shop. He was a founding member of the Las Vegas Volunteer Fire Department, engaged in real estate trading, and was part owner of a clothing store. He was a member of the Indian Collectors Association, an active member of the Elks, loved to travel, and had an interest in history and folklore.

Leon Rockwell spent only four years away from Las Vegas. For two years he served overseas in the United States Navy during World War One and two years traveling with his family in California. His brother Ronald suffered from injuries sustained during the war and spent the rest of his life in a hospital in California. Ronald passed away in 1936. Leon Halliday Rockwell passed away in Las Vegas, Nevada in September of 1968.
