Historical Background

In 1940 Californian hotel operator Thomas Hull visited Las Vegas, Nevada to purchase land for a new hotel. Enticed by local businessmen Robert Griffith and James Cashman, Hull bought a parcel on Sahara Avenue and Las Vegas Boulevard (then Highway 91) and opened El Rancho Vegas, the first hotel on what became the Las Vegas Strip. The location was outside of Las Vegas city limits, which allowed Hull to avoid city taxes. El Rancho Vegas opened in 1941 and was the largest hotel in Las Vegas until 1942.

Hull sold El Rancho Vegas, and the hotel changed hands several times, temporarily belonging to several owners with connections to organized crime. In 1947, Beldon Katleman bought El Rancho and invested $750,000 for renovations, increasing the hotel's size by 220 rooms and enlarging the casino.

In 1960 a fire destroyed El Rancho Vegas. Despite promising to rebuild the hotel, Katleman sold the property. Billionaire entrepreneur Howard Hughes purchased the empty site but never developed it. In 2004 the Hilton built a timeshare tower on the land.
