Biographical Note

Frank D. Rathbun was born in 1908 to Frank De Graff and Mary Goldacker Rathbun. In 1927, the Los Angeles Metropolitan Water District hired Rathbun as an engineer and surveyor. In this position, he worked on water development and dam projects throughout the southwestern United States, primarily in California, Nevada, and Arizona. Most notable among these projects was the Colorado River Aqueduct in the 1930s. Rathbun documented archaeological sites throughout his surveying work, identifying areas with Native American petroglyphs, artifacts, and structures, as well as areas of unusual geological interest. Frank D. Rathbun died in 1968 and was buried in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Scope and Contents Note

The Frank D. Rathbun Photograph Collection dates from approximately 1915 to 1968 and consists primarily of black-and-white photographic prints and some corresponding negatives taken by Frank D. Rathbun and Michael Moen. The majority of the images depict petroglyphs located throughout the desert southwest in Nevada, California, and Arizona, as well as documentary images of the construction of the Los Angeles Aqueduct and the Hoover Dam transmission lines and patrol roads. Additional material includes postcards from areas Rathbun visited in California, Arizona, and Nevada. A significant number of the petroglyph images were taken by Michael Moen in 1968, during his resurvey of the various sites Rathbun visited in the 1930s; Rathbun's original images of the sites offer comparisons over time.
